I learned a valuable lesson from this experience. Today when I go to the barber, I always say exactly how I want my hair done. I advise you to do the same. Speak to the barber before you sit down in that revolving chair. Explain exactly what you want. Watch carefully in the mirror as the barber cuts your hair. Don't be frightened to speak up. Barbers want their customers to be happy. They welcome your instructions.

I was probably too sensitive about my hair then. Now, at my age, I'm just proud of the hair that I have. By the way, Mr. Willard no longer cuts my hair. He's retired. His daughter Wihelmina, a hairstylist, runs the shop. She not only cuts my hair, but she also styles the hair of my wife and children. No more plucked chickens.
