Once a possible job has been found, what should job hunters do? First, they must learn all about the job and ask themselves these questions: Am I qualified for this job? Do I want this job? Is it challenging? Is it interesting? Does it pay well? If all these are answered positively, then the next step the applicants need to do is to apply for the job. Nearly every job requires some forms of written application. Most job application forms ask for similar information about personal data, including educational background, employment history, and references.
