You can see tired students going home with their heavy schoolbags from cram schools late at night all over Taiwan. Taiwan is test - oriented, so most students go to these after-class schools which “cram” all the contents of books and testing key points into their heads. Many students hate to go to cram schools after they have already spent all day in class. They often say that they have no free time to take a break and to do what they like. However, some students like going to cram schools because of helpful teachers and interesting new friends. The most important thing is that the intensive practice often does raise student’ grades. Although cram schools can be helpful, we have to remember that if these after-class schools only fill students with “fish” teachers feed them and don’t teach them how to fish, they won’t be active students.
