Anti-natalists want people to stop having babies. They advocate that humans should not have babies and should gradually go extinct. It's a philosophy called anti-natalism. While the idea dates back to ancient Greece, it has recently been given a huge boost by social media. Anti-natalists are scattered around the world and have a variety of reasons for their beliefs. These include concerns about genetic inheritance, not wanting children to suffer, the concept of consent, and worries about overpopulation and the environment. But they are united in their desire to stop human procreation. And although they are a marginal movement, some of their views, particularly on the state of the earth, are increasingly creeping into mainstream discussion. Despite some of the nihilist rhetoric in anti-natalist groups, there is no indication that they are a threat of violence. When they talk about extinction, people often think it is a debating exercise.
